The article was an interesting read. I do agree that people do have learning styles and when we implement it. It doesn't always get us the result we wanted. As learning style isn't a fixed concept and we tend to be a mix of all when we are learning different subjects. In my interpretation, but I also believe that a person should have a drive to learn the subject then being told to learn it. For me I hate reading books and anything that doesn't peak my interests in books. I thought I hated books and reading them, but I learned that I do like reading, just not what I was told to read things. I know this has nothing to do with learning style, but I'm saying that if it peaks someone's interest in a subject. They would be likely to learn from it. I do believe learning styles does help people if there is a drive in the subject and if they are interested in learning it.
