I like him saying how our childhood dreams can shape us throughout the years. Shaping us to be a better person and what we imagine what we want to become. It makes me think a lot and how I always wanted to be a superhero (still do). A hero like Superman, Spiderman, Nightwing and Flash (The Wally West version) with many more. I wanted to be the one that people need a symbol that people need. The one that shows the greatest compassion and gives people second chances. The one who will be the strongest as a duty to protect the weak. I tried my best to be strong and try to be a kinder person due to my past. He also had many obstacles due to career and cancer. He still tries to pass on a legacy to his kids and that is inspiring. As for me , superheroes not only save people, but leave a lasting effect on the people they save and try to be better people like their heroes. The quote he says quite early in the video is “Experience is what you get when you don't get what you want” that was a hard hitting. I know I won't be a Superhero, but I can experience the great way of helping people and trying to inspire others with the past i lived and trying to be better.
